ABOUT TEXAZTASTE

Finding inspiration is a different journey for everyone. For me, food is where it all starts. From local eats to the history of cultural delights – there is so much food can teach us about community, health, and happiness. Gaining this kind of global perspective and passion for connection never seemed possible from the discomfort of a cubicle.

That's why I left my job. Inspired by my mother's experiences as a restaurant owner in Texas, I attended the Arizona Culinary Institute where I felt like I belonged. After honing my skills in the culinary world, my path changed once again when I found myself caring for my mother during her fight with a terminal illness.

After she passed, writing and healthy living became two of the most important parts of my life, especially while dealing with my own health issues. In need of some kind of release and a way to continue communicating with my mother, TEXAZTASTE was born, keeping alive our shared love for food and travel.
